PREFACE

Established in 1972 at the University of California, Irvine, the Thesaurus Linguae Graecae® (TLG®) represents the earliest effort to produce a large-scale digital corpus of literary texts in the humanities. The goal of the project has been to identify, assemble, digitize, and make available to scholars and students the entire corpus of Greek literature from antiquity to the present era. In the fifty years of its history, the TLG has created a comprehensive collection of texts that includes more than forty-five hundred authors and more than twenty thousand works from Homer (eighth century B.C.) to the twentieth century.

The enormous amount of data that the TLG has gathered over time, known as the TLG Canon of Authors and Works, is stored in an expandable database that includes both biographical and bibliographical information about each author, covering dates, place of birth, literary activity, and a list of their extant works and print publications. The Canon is a constantly evolving scholarly effort and an integral part of the TLG corpus. Its author-identifier system is a well-established standard used by all Greek digital projects to uniformly tag Greek authors and their extant works.

A printed version of the Canon was last published in 1990.¹ Since then the Canon has grown from approximately eight thousand to more than twenty thousand entries. The present volume is a bibliographic guide to the authors and works included in the TLG. It incorporates research conducted by the project since its inception. Given the scope of the effort and the need to limit the presentation to one volume, some selection was inevitable. Entries compiled prior to 1996 are marked with an asterisk. They have been reviewed and updated.

An obvious question is why a printed guide is needed. The online TLG includes only authors and works represented by texts in the collection at any given time. Therefore, only a subset of the Canon database is searchable online. The printed version contains the full literary-historical and bibliographical research conducted by the TLG, including a large number of text editions of historical importance, information about authors known by name only, works that may have survived only by title, and new works and text editions that will be part of the digital corpus at a later time.

A second reason why a printed guide is needed is that digital formats are not always the most accessible. There is a difference between holding a book in one's hands and being able to browse through hundreds of pages of information, a process similar to browsing the library stacks and pulling out volumes that you did not even know existed, as opposed to querying a database for specific information that you wish to locate quickly. The printed volume was and still is the easiest way to locate the Canon author and work numbers as well as the correct spelling of the Latinized names and TLG-assigned work titles. Finally, the printed version is an important reference work that can be useful to anyone interested in the history of Greek literature regardless of whether they intend to consult the online TLG or not.

THE THESAURUS OF THE GREEK LANGUAGE (1972–2022)

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE PROJECT

The creation of the Thesaurus Linguae Graecae in 1972 marked the end of a long-standing effort to produce a comprehensive lexicon of Greek. During the sixteenth century, Henri Estienne, a French scholar and printer known as Stephanus, compiled lexica for both Greek and Latin. His Greek lexicon, printed in five volumes and known as the Thesaurus Graecae Linguae,¹ became the model for Greek lexicography for more than three hundred years. In the late nineteenth century the discovery of thousands of new papyri in Egypt and the rise of modern textual criticism motivated European scholars to undertake the creation of new lexica for Greek and Latin. The sheer volume of materials (estimated at nine million words for Latin and ninety million for Greek) and the cumbersome methods of gathering data manually presented overwhelming challenges. Based on the experience of the Latin dictionary, which was considered more manageable, Herman Diels famously described the compilation of the Greek lexicon as an attempt to put “νόμος into chaos.”² Not surprisingly, the idea of a Greek dictionary was abandoned for many decades.

Subsequent efforts, most notably one undertaken in the 1950s by Bruno Snell at the University of Hamburg, were also abandoned until the late 1960s, when Marianne McDonald, a graduate student of Classics at the University of California, Irvine, proposed the creation of a digital Greek thesaurus. Marianne McDonald was motivated by her dissertation research on “terms for happiness.” Being the daughter of Eugene McDonald, founder of the Zenith Corporation, she understood the potential of technology and recognized that computers could do in seconds what years of manual data collection had failed to accomplish. So, it was a young classicist's search for "terms for happiness" that provided the impetus for the creation of the digital thesaurus, fittingly named "Thesaurus Linguae Graecae" after its Renaissance predecessor.

THE EARLY DAYS

The TLG was officially established on October 30, 1972, the date of the first Planning Conference held at the University of California, Irvine.³ However, the idea behind the project and the discussions about its feasibility had begun much earlier. Prior to the conference, the scope of the project was defined as "a lexicographical work that will collect, sort, and identify every single word extant in ancient Greek literary and non-literary documents."⁴

The 1972 conference established many of the principles that governed the project for years to come, such as its chronological scope, the selection of appropriate text editions, and policies to be followed regarding digitization. At the recommendation of David W. Packard,⁵ it was decided that the TLG would not be a lexicon, as the name "thesaurus" indicates, but a collection of texts that would provide the data for the subsequent creation of dictionaries. This was a critical decision. Had the Planning Committee opted for the creation of a dictionary, the TLG would have been in the same position as many other lexicographical projects that take decades or even centuries to complete.⁶ The TLG, true to its name, is a "treasure-house" of Greek literature.

The chronological scope of the project was initially set to cover texts from Homer to 200 A.D., an arbitrary cut-off date that was adjusted first to A.D. 400 and later to A.D. 600. It was also agreed that the TLG would not contain epigraphical and papyrological works, with the exception of literary works preserved on papyri or inscriptions, and that it would not include the critical apparatus of the texts. Theodore F. Brunner, chair of Classics at the time, was named the first TLG director, a position he held for twenty-five years. Marianne McDonald, whose generous gift made this ambitious undertaking possible, insisted on anonymity until her graduation from the University of California at Irvine, and attended the conference as a member of the Classics Department.⁷

A major factor in the successful implementation of the project was the contribution of David W. Packard and his team, especially William Johnson,⁸ who together created the Ibycus system, namely the hardware and software originally used to check the spelling and formatting of the digitized texts and to search the TLG corpus. Packard also developed the character and formatting encoding convention for Greek, known as Beta Code. Beta Code assigns an ASCII position to each of the twenty-four Greek letters. Diacritics are indicated by nonalphabetic characters following the accented vowel. Due to its simple structure, Beta Code remains to this day the most practical way to encode polytonic Greek data.⁹

After considering various options, the project decided that digitization could be done more efficiently and economically via keyboarding, originally in Korea, later in the Philippines, and for the last thirty years in China. Given the volume of digitization and need for accuracy, scanning and optical character recognition would not be financially sustainable options. Today, the texts are shipped to China, where typists, ignorant of Greek, key the characters in Beta code together with the necessary encoding. The digital files are then returned to the United States, where they are checked for errors with special correction software.¹⁰

In the early days of the project, digital texts were disseminated on magnetic tapes. In 1985 Packard and William Johnson cofounded the Ibycus Systems Inc. and developed the Ibycus Personal Scholarly Computer (PSC), the first computer to allow the editing, search, and retrieval of classical texts in a fully integrated desktop package. Designed before the introduction of the Apple Macintosh, this personal computer combined multilingual word processing with a high-speed CD ROM–based delivery system for large text data.¹¹ Packard (assisted by Johnson and Wilkins Poe) also developed the indices and other subsystems that permitted rapid search and retrieval of TLG texts on CD ROM. With their help, the TLG took the first step towards a wider distribution of its digital data, namely the production of the first TLG disk (TLG A), containing twenty-seven million words. In 1988, the TLG released an updated CD ROM (TLG C) with forty-two million words, followed by TLG D with fifty-six million words in 1992. TLG A was the first compact disk ever produced. This disk, which was designed to be read by Ibycus, did not contain any search software. As microcomputers became more popular and readily available in the late 1980s, a number of search programs were developed by independent software developers to search the TLG disk on Macintosh or PC computers. Nevertheless, Ibycus PSC had an important impact on subsequent developments in the field of text processing and was formative in motivating scholars of antiquity to utilize computer resources well ahead of their peers in allied disciplines.

In 1993, in the middle of a budget crisis, the University of California offered its faculty incentives for early retirement. Both Brunner and Berkowitz opted to retire but were recalled at 50 percent time to ensure the smooth transition of the project as Brunner's successor was being recruited. This was a critical moment for the project. All options were considered, including the possibility of downsizing the TLG to a small unit that would license CD ROMs. Three years later, I joined the TLG as the second TLG director.

MOVING INTO THE TWENTY-FIRST CENTURY

At the beginning of my term, a number of critical choices had to be made. Due to Theodore Brunner's early retirement and the protracted search for his successor, the project had gone through a period of reduced activity. This would have been a normal development of little consequence under different circumstances, but by 1996 technology was already moving rapidly and web technologies were making huge strides. The TLG was hampered by once revolutionary but now outdated technology. The Project had no technical expertise, no knowledge on how to produce a new compact disk to disseminate its data, and the Ibycus system could no longer handle the increased volume of texts and bibliographies. The Packard Humanities Institute (PHI) was no longer able to assist in the production of an updated disk. The TLG needed an infrastructure based on contemporary, widely used technologies and qualified research and programming staff capable of performing the complex interdisciplinary tasks dictated by the nature of the project. These included the development of an in-house system to replace Ibycus, capable of checking the formatting and morphology of texts; software to produce CD-ROMs and make the TLG data immediately available; and an online search and retrieval system to move TLG dissemination to the Internet.

The first priority was to form a team capable of performing these tasks. Nick Nicholas and Nishad Prakash joined the TLG in February 1999. For six months we worked around the clock to update the TLG data and infrastructure. Nicholas undertook the project of developing software to check the formatting and spelling of the digitized texts. Prakash focused his attention on transferring the Canon data to a relational database and on developing a web-based system for cataloguing and editing the bibliographies. By the summer of 1999, we had a new text correction system and a database designed to store the bibliographical data.

Migration out of Ibycus was a Herculean task that took months to prepare and execute. Thousands of texts had to be downloaded from a system with limited memory and networking capabilities. For two months, we worked shifts downloading data, one file at a time. Large files were particularly difficult to download because Ibycus froze whenever a text exceeded its memory capabilities. Some texts were corrupted and had to be manually reconstructed. The Canon file containing thousands of bibliographical records was too large to download and had to be broken into pieces. When it was finally extracted, all formatting was lost and had to be reentered manually. At the end it took weeks of nonstop work, sometimes till early morning hours, to complete all the tasks and meet our deadlines.

In September 1999, Ibycus was disconnected and replaced by the new in-house system. With the necessary infrastructure in place, the next task was to produce a new and long-anticipated TLG CD-ROM. Work on TLG E began in the summer of 1999. In the absence of technical documentation, Nicholas decoded the format developed by the Packard team so that the new disk would be compatible with existing search software developed by independent developers. TLG E was the only disk produced in-house by the TLG. It contained all data collected by the project including new data collected between 1992 and 1999. The most important development was that the project had a better understanding of its data and therefore the ability to move forward confidently without relying on outside entities.

By 1999 the TLG had a considerable presence in the scholarly community, and there was a need to protect its name and safeguard its international reputation. To this end, we applied for and were granted three trademarks for the name, acronym, and TLG logo. The TLG trademarks were the first ever registered at the University of California, Irvine.

In April of 2001 the Project went online, moving away from the earlier CD-ROM format. By then it was clear that the Internet was destined to become the preferred medium for data dissemination. Investing in two different technologies was not a wise use of resources. Additionally, relying on independent developers to maintain search software of TLG data had proven to be risky. By the time TLG E was released, several CD-ROM software packages were no longer supported. Continued maintenance of a TLG-developed search engine involved a serious commitment on our part, but it also ensured that scholars and students of Greek could always count on a constantly updated and well-functioning site.

In addition to programming tasks, massive correction of the texts was undertaken during this time. The new verification and correction system (V&C) allowed the TLG to check the digitized texts more efficiently. With new tools in place, the corpus was able to undergo expansion on a previously unseen scale. An abridged version of the corpus was established containing a number of authors that have traditionally been used in college-level instruction of Greek, namely Homer and Hesiod, the dramatists, Plato and Aristotle, Xenophon, the Attic orators, and a selection of patristic authors. The abridged version was designed to make the TLG accessible to secondary education and small undergraduate programs. Over time it has served a number of purposes. As text editions are updated, earlier versions are added to the Abridged TLG, which has continued to grow as a smaller open-access corpus.

In 2002, thanks to an equipment grant from Sun Microsystems, the online TLG was installed on an UltraSPARC-II server, which was appropriately dubbed "Stephanus." This server has since been replaced by several generations of servers that can sustain high usage and provide fast access to the TLG data.

Today, the TLG collection contains almost three times as many texts as the E disk, with holdings reaching into the twentieth century. Work is underway to fill in remaining gaps and to complete the early modern and modern collection. Existing texts are also updated as new editions and revised readings become available. Concurrently with the expansion of the corpus, the conception of the Canon has been both refined and expanded. In addition to assigning a four-digit number to each author and a three-digit number to each work, the Canon database now includes a complex citation system that describes the structure of each text included in the TLG.

The original goal of the project was to produce digital copies of critical editions of ancient Greek. This was an extraordinary endeavor in the 1980s. But these goals had been accomplished by the early 1990s, and it was important for the project to move forward and engage in innovative research.

In the late 1980s, Ihor Sevcenco, in his role as chair of the APA-appointed advisory committee, advocated for the inclusion of Byzantine texts in the corpus. His efforts met with great resistance. The committee eventually reached a compromise and agreed to include texts of potential interest to classicists, namely late historiographical and lexicographical texts, as well as the Byzantine scholia. In a meeting at Dumbarton Oaks in 2004, Ihor Sevcenco told me how he “forced his way” onto the committee to ensure that Byzantine texts would be included. Looking back, this was a decisive moment in the history of the project. When I joined the TLG, I was convinced it should be a corpus containing all of Greek literature, and for the last twenty-five years we have focused our research on the literary production of postclassical periods. Several years on, Byzantine studies are flourishing, in no small part thanks to the availability of Byzantine materials provided by the TLG. Scholarship in earlier periods has likewise benefited enormously from the wealth of information contained in Byzantine texts. The expansion of the corpus into the post-Byzantine era is certain to call attention to hitherto unknown texts and to continue to be a stimulus for new research.¹²

THE UNICODE INITIATIVE

Before the advent of the Internet, a number of fonts had been developed to display Greek characters. These ad hoc font collections made it possible for classicists to enter Greek with their word processing software. However, the lack of compatibility and of a uniform standard among these various fonts prevented the sharing of documents across different platforms. The Unicode Consortium was established to address the needs of world languages and to provide a consistent standard for representing all known language scripts.¹³ From 2002 to 2004 we undertook the task of collecting and documenting all known Greek characters, alphabetic and nonalphabetic, to be proposed for inclusion in the Unicode Standard. Our research results were presented to the Unicode Technical Committee (UTC) in a series of meetings during this period. Some 215 characters attested in Greek texts—including epigraphical, papyrological, and editorial characters, ancient acrophonic numerals, metrical and numerical sigla, and New Testament editorial symbols—were documented with all their variants and approved for inclusion by the Unicode Consortium and subsequently by the International Standards Organization (ISO), ensuring that polytonic Greek could be uniformly read across all computer platforms and browsers.¹⁴ The TLG has continued to provide information to software and font developers and to maintain guides on the use and properties of Greek characters.

LEMMATIZATION AND ONLINE LEXICA

Because of the highly inflected nature of Greek and the linguistic and orthographic heterogeneity of the corpus, searching the TLG for individual word-forms can be tedious. In 2003, the TLG embarked on a massive goal: the complete lemmatization of its corpus. The first effort to employ computers in the morphological analysis of Greek was undertaken in the early 1970s by David Packard,¹⁵ who estimated that approximately 93 to 94 percent of classical Greek texts could be lemmatized automatically. Given the extensive diachronic and dialectical coverage of the TLG corpus, automatic lemmatization proved to be a project of enormous complexity. It required extensive documentation of numerous and often conflicting morphological rules that describe the morphology of the language over a period of three thousand years and the development of a large database of dictionary forms. To this end, the TLG digitized and extracted headwords from a large number of dictionaries of ancient, medieval, and modern Greek. The extraction of headwords was only one step towards increasing automatic recognition. Extensive coding and manual intervention were required to improve form parsing and recognition and to minimize ambiguity. Today the TLG lemmatizer is a powerful system that can automatically recognize 98.4 percent of all Greek word-forms, including Byzantine and modern, thus exceeding all earlier expectations.

¹⁴ See TLG Unicode proposals at E-Scholarship: Open Access Publications from the University of California, https://escholarship.org/uc/tlg_unicode. As of Unicode version 5.1, all characters proposed by the TLG are part of the Unicode Standard. See also the TLG Quick Reference Guide: www.tlg.uci.edu/encoding/quickbeta.pdf.

As part of the lemmatization project, the TLG became active in developing and making available online lexica. The first major effort in this direction was the most ambitious: the digitization of the Liddell-Scott-Jones (LSJ) dictionary first released in 2009. A massive volume comprising twenty-two hundred pages printed in miniscule font, full of abbreviated forms, and organized by an inconsistent structure, LSJ remains the best and most used lexicographical tool in the field. Digitizing, encoding, and correcting LSJ took me five years of intense work to complete. The end result is an accurate and highly functional resource used by millions of students around the globe.

The digitization of Cunliffe's Lexicon of Homeric Greek and Powell's Lexicon to Herodotus followed in 2012. At the same time, we extracted headwords and meanings from the Bauer-Danker Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature (BDAG) and G.W.H. Lampe's Patristic Greek Lexicon. In 2013 the TLG and the Austrian Academy of Sciences joined forces to create a digital version of E. Trapp's Lexikon zur byzantinischen Gräzität (LBG), the premier dictionary for Byzantine Greek. In 2020 the project released a searchable version of Koumanoudes's Συναγωγή νέων λέξεων. A number of other lexica have been indexed and linked to the texts. These include Kriaras's Epitome of the lexicon of Medieval Greek, Triantafyllides Λεξικό της κοινής νεοελληνικής, both available through the portal of the Center for the Greek Language, the Diccionario Griego-Español (DGE), Slater's Lexicon to Pindar and the Montanari-Perrone Supplementary Lexicon of Ancient Greek (WIP). Digitization of dictionaries will continue as TLG expands its holdings to later periods.

In 2015 a completely overhauled web site was released. The new site, still in use as of 2022, provides an extensive search-and-retrieval system that allows for highly sophisticated tasks to be performed. It includes expanded searching of the Canon data and takes advantage of the TLG lemmatizer. Its improved text search interface allows Boolean searches with regular expression capabilities, intertextual searches, statistical analysis, ability to compare texts for similarities and differences, and numerous other features that expand the reach and functionality of the TLG.

Year 2022 marks the fiftieth anniversary of the project. The TLG corpus has been available in more than one thousand universities and research centers in seventy-four countries across the world and is used by millions of researchers, educators, and students from a wide range of disciplines including Classics, Byzantine studies, history, art, philosophy, linguistics, and religious studies, to name a few. What started out as a search for “terms of happiness” has become a transformative enterprise with the potential to foster research in Greek studies for years to come.

CLASSIFICATIONS AND CONVENTIONS

THE CANON STANDARD

The Canon of Greek Authors and Works was originally developed as an in-house catalog of works to be used as a record-keeping aid to the TLG staff. As its data increased, the TLG research team realized that the extensive research required for the compilation of the Canon should be shared widely with the scholarly community in both print and digital format.¹ Over time the Canon grew into a comprehensive catalog of Greek authors and their works and a bibliographic guide to their print publications. The importance of this effort goes beyond its end product. Identifying and collecting all authors and works from antiquity to the present era, resolving authorship questions, establishing dates, and ascertaining literary contributions is no trivial task. When the TLG was first established, the expectation was that four to six hundred authors had survived up to A.D. 5. The actual number of extant authors from this period is more than eighteen hundred, while the total number of authors identified by the TLG to date exceeds forty-five hundred.

The online version of the Canon provides information about authors and works represented by texts in the corpus. It is structured as an expandable and constantly evolving database organized by fields to facilitate searching of the extensive data developed by the project. This printed version offers much broader coverage of extant authors and is not limited to one text edition per work. It includes information about authors known only by name or title as well as authors whose writings have only partially survived through later testi-monia. The print version attempts to catalog as many major editions of texts as possible whether or not they are part of the online corpus.²

For practical reasons, research on the Canon has progressed in chronologically structured phases.³

Phase I: Homer to A.D. 200. During this phase, most major classical authors were collected and digitized in accordance with the original mandate of the project.

Phase II: A.D. 200 to A.D. 400. This phase represented the first extension of the project beyond its original goal to cover late antiquity.

Phase III: A.D. 400 to A.D. 600. This phase was undertaken in the mid- to late '80s, when the project was expanded to include a selection of early patristic texts.

Phase IV: A.D. 600 to A.D. 1453. Between 1988 and 1994 the project was extended to include selected historiographical and lexicographical works from the Byzantine period as well as scholia to classical authors. Systematic work on all genres of this period began in 1998.

Phase V: A.D. 1453 to A.D. 1800. This is the most recent phase of the project, focusing on post-Byzantine and early modern Greek literature. A number of authors and works from this period have been added and included in the present volume.

From our perspective, no literary period is ever considered complete. The ancient corpus is well represented, but new readings and new critical editions appear regularly, making it necessary for us to constantly update our text editions and bibliographical records. The Byzantine collection is well represented, but a number of manuscripts are yet to be published and a large number of works exist in older, noncritical editions, often based on incomplete compilation of extant manuscripts. The post-fifteenth-century collection is ongoing.

² The number of authors collected in the TLG exceeds by a factor of two the number of authors currently included in the online version.

CANON CONVENTIONS

The conventions that have guided the compilation of the Canon were set in the early days of the project and have, to the extent possible, been used consistently throughout. As the TLG moved into the Byzantine and later periods, some of the Canon conventions had to be refined and expanded.

Each Canon entry includes three components: Author, Work, and Print Publication.

TLG AUTHOR

A permanent four-digit identification number (author ID) is assigned to each author. A four-digit number is sometimes assigned to a commonly recognized collection of works, such as the New Testament, or any collection of works that cannot be attributed to a specific author, such as the lives of saints or the scholia to ancient works.⁴ Work collections are assigned a date, where possible. Where no specific date can be given, the designation ‘Varia’ is used.

The author ID is located in the right-hand margin of the page. Where the TLG has no information about an author’s works, even as a title, the name of the author alone may be listed, with a number assigned to the author. This is done with the assumption that more information about the author may be obtained in the future. Occasionally, the name of an author or work collection has no ID assigned to it. This happens when the author is better known by a different name or his/her entry is located at a different section of the Canon. In such cases, author information includes a cross-reference. For example, ATHENAÏS-EUDOCIA is a cross-reference to EUDOCIA AUGUSTA Poet. (2766). Similarly, Macarius MELISSENIUS, the sixteenth-century metropolitan of Monembasia, thought to be the author of the Chronicon Maius, is carried under the name Pseudo-SPHRANTZES (3143), while the VETUS TESTAMENTUM exists under the name assigned to the Greek version of the Old Testament, that is, the SEPTUAGINTA (0527).

Authors are identified by name (alternate name(s) may also be listed), by date (indicating the century of the author’s floruit), and by a number of epithets. Epithets indicate the literary activity they engaged in (generic epithet), the geographic areas where they lived (geographic epithet), and other affiliations (nonstandard generic epithet). Work collections are identified by genre.

AUTHOR ORDERING

Authors are arranged alphabetically with their names in boldface capital letters.⁵ As a rule, names of authors and works are rendered in Latin. When a name or title resists Latinization, Greek or alternate names are used. This is particularly common in later periods where the Greek rendering of the name may be preferable. For example, no effort is made to render the Byzantine parody known as SPANOS (3199) in Latin.

Authors with identical names are distinguished by their descriptive epithets. Authors with identical names and descriptive epithets are ordered by TLG Author number. Names with a prefix such as “Pseudo-” and “Proto-” are alphabetized by the second part of their hyphenated name. For example, Pseudo-Lucianus appears immediately after Lucianus.

Earlier authors are typically ordered by their traditionally known names. Thus, APOLLONIUS Rhodius (0001) is alphabetized as Apollonius and not by his geographic affiliation (Rhodius). In cases where author names have survived with praenomen, nomen, and cognomen, the Canon uses the most recognized name. For example, Publius Cornelius SCIPIO is listed under Scipio.

Ordering of names becomes considerably more complex in later periods. When the family name (surname/patronymic) of the author is known, the author is identified by surname, whereas in cases where the author is commonly recognized by an attributive or descriptive by-name, the first name is used. Thus, Georgius ACROPOLITES (3141) is listed under his surname, while GEORGIUS Nicomediensis (3292) is alphabetized under his first name. JOANNES Chrysostomus is alphabetized as JOANNES, as are JOANNES Diaconus and JOANNES Patriarcha II. Generally, it is assumed that surnames were common after A.D. 8.

Square brackets are used to question the authenticity of the name or the existence of the author. For example, [HEGESINUS] Epic. (1395) is bracketed because our only source for the author is Pausanias, who vaguely identifies him as the author of the poem Atthis citing Callippus of Corinth. Only a fragment of the poem has survived and no other testimony about the author exists.

Angle brackets are used to question the attribution of a certain work to the author. For example, <ASTRAMPSYCHUS Magus> (2642) is the name associated with the Sortes Astrampsychi or Oracles of Astrampsychus, a popular fortune-telling guide that has survived in papyrus fragments dating from the third to sixth centuries A.D. and in late Byzantine manuscripts. The Sortes is more likely to have been a collective work developed over centuries. The attribution of the work is therefore questioned, as indicated by the angle brackets.

AUTHOR DATE

The TLG assigns a date (or a date range) of each author. For individual authors, the Canon lists the century of the author's floruit. The date is conveyed in Arabic numerals indicating centuries and located beneath the name of the author.

When the life of the author spans two centuries, a dash is used between numerals; for example, Plato's floruit is 5–4 B.C. When the date is uncertain but approximation is possible, a slash is used to indicate the earliest and latest possible dates. For example, the lyric poetess CORINNA (0294) may have lived as early as 5 B.C. or as late as 3 B.C. Her date is listed as 5/3 B.C.

The assignment of a date is an important and at the same time challenging function of the Canon. For most authors, even later ones, ascertaining dates is not always possible. When the evidence of a date is questioned, a question mark is placed next to the date. Terminus ante quem and terminus post quem are used when the works of an author have survived in late manuscripts and their original date of composition cannot be determined. This is often the case with hagiographical works that originate around the time of the life or death of the saint and have gone through many revisions. Manuscripts often reflect later adaptations. In such cases, no precise date can be given. In the case of work collections that include works from different periods (for example, the astrological corpus), date ranges or the designation varia or incerta may be assigned.

Author dates are not reflective of the composition date of a particular work. AESOPUS (0096) is usually dated 6 B.C.; however, his fables continued to be transmitted, amplified, and translated throughout time. As a result, most of the works listed under his name were composed long after 6 B.C. With a few exceptions, work dates have not been included in the present volume, but they are given in the Online Canon.

Dates are handled differently in the online version, due to the need to search for authors by date and to order search results chronologically. When the date is uncertain, we make every effort to provide an approximate date. For example, the date of the earliest known manuscript may be used with the designation ante. In the case of work collections the date of the collection may be Varia but search results are based on the dates of individual works.

AUTHOR EPITHETS

Descriptive epithets are used to identify and disambiguate authors. An epithet is preceded by fort(asse) when the origin of the author is uncertain. Three types of epithets are used: generic, geographic, and nonstandard generic.

GENERIC EPITHET. The generic epithet indicates the kind of literary activity or genre the author engaged in. The list is not meant to be exhaustive, and as a rule only one or two generic epithets are listed. Work classifications provide a more detailed picture of the author's literary activity. The assignment of epithets is to a large extent arbitrary.

Generic epithets correspond to well-established genres and should be self-explanatory. Epithets are abbreviated so that they are gender-neutral. For the sake of illustration, a list of generic epithets is provided below, spelled out in their masculine singular form.

GEOGRAPHIC EPITHET. The geographic epithet indicates the author's place of floruit or main place of residence. It is printed after the author date and separated by a colon. The Canon does not list every single location associated with an author, especially when the details of the author's life are uncertain. For example, METHODIUS I, Patriarch of Constantinople during the ninth century, is listed as Constantinopolitanus. We know that he also spent time in Rome and was an abbot at a monastery in Bithynia, but these locations are not listed because they are not considered to be primary locations of his literary activity.

The geographic epithet can be useful in disambiguating authors with the same name and the same or similar generic epithet(s). For example, APOLLODORUS Phil. (1166) from Seleucia is distinguished from APOLLODORUS Phil. (2319) from Cyzicus. When the geographic origin of an author is unknown, no epithet is listed.

Following is a representative selection of geographic epithets.

Bithynius	Euboecensis	Paphlagonius	Veneticus
Boeotus	Florentinus	Parisinus	Veronensis
Bulgarius	Gabalensis	Peloponnesius	Zacynthius

NONSTANDARD GENERIC EPITHET. The nonstandard generic epithet provides information about the author's occupation or official position (Episcopus, Patriarcha, Imperator), their relationship to other well-known individuals (Filius Alexii I Comneni imperatoris or Discipulus Manuelis Planudis), or the school of thought they are associated with (Epicureus or Neoplatonicus). In a few cases, the non-standard generic epithet simply indicates a quality traditionally associated with the author. For example, CONSTANTINUS XI PALAEOLOGUS is often referred to with the distinctive epithet, the Marble Emperor (Ὁ Μαρμαρωμένος βασιλιάς).

TLG WORK

Each work is assigned a three-digit identifier. For example, Homer is author 0012. Homer's Iliad is identified as 0012 001. The work number is located in the left-hand margin of each work entry below the author information.

The structure of each work is identified by its citation. The TLG tries, when possible, to follow a standard citation, namely a citation established by tradition or a particular print edition. Homer's epics are each divided into twenty-four books according to the twenty-four letters of the Greek alphabet;⁶ therefore, they are cited as Book/Line. The first line of the first book of Homer's Iliad is cited as 0012 001 Book 1 Line 1 or 0012.001.1.1. In the absence of a widely accepted citation, the TLG follows the citation of the selected print edition. For example, texts included in Migne's Patrologia Graeca are marked as Column/Line.

When more than one modern edition of a text exists, a different three-digit number is assigned to each edition. Thus, T.W. Allen's edition of the Iliad is TLG work 001, and M. L. West's edition is work 004. Once assigned, numbers become permanent and do not as a rule get reassigned.⁷ TLG work numbers are usually but not always sequential. Missing numbers indicate works that are not ready for publication, numbers reserved for future use, or bibliographical references that were at one point assigned but have subsequently been removed or replaced.

Each work is further identified by its title (in Latin or Greek), its classification or genre, and its transmission medium. Word counts are included only for works represented in the TLG by digital texts. Each work is linked to one or more bibliographical references to print editions known to the TLG. Cross-references to related works may also be listed at the end of the entry. Work identifiers with the prefix x indicate cross-references to other works. These are works carried under a different author or work collection in the corpus. Figure 1 illustrates the main elements of a Canon entry.

WORD COUNT

Word count indicates the length of a text and is important for statistical analysis. A word is defined as a string of characters preceded and followed by blank spaces. In calculating word counts, the TLG considers only Greek words. Latin forms, sigla, non-Greek editorial comments, citations, and beta escapes are not included in the count. When a text edition is not represented by a text in the corpus, the TLG does not provide a word count.

TRANSMISSION

Each work is marked with a code indicating the medium on which the work has been transmitted to us. The transmission of ancient works is not always as clear as the TLG Canon codes may indicate, and scholars who need accurate and detailed information are encouraged to consult specialized resources.

The transmission medium is labeled as Cod(ex), Pap(yrus), Epigr(aph), or Print. Codex is assigned to works that have been transmitted via medieval manuscripts. When a critical edition is based on a compilation of manuscripts, Cod is assigned even in cases where part of the work has been transmitted in papyri or inscriptions. The Homeric epics are a notable example of a work transmitted by both papyri and manuscripts but marked as Cod. The abbreviation Pap is used for works that have only survived in papyri (for example, most of Philodemus's works). Works dating after the invention of printing are usually marked with the code Print.

The abbreviation Q(quoted) is used to indicate works that have been preserved as direct or indirect quotes by other authors. N(on)Q(otation) is used for lost works, that is, works that are known only from indirect testimonia.

TLG TEXT EDITIONS

In the early days of the project, the TLG selected one printed critical edition to digitize. Bibliographical information about this edition was included in the Canon. The digital text was meant to be a "mirror" image of the print original. Text editions were selected and approved by a committee appointed by the American Philological Association (now the Society for Classical Studies).⁸ Over time, the project assumed greater responsibility in making the selection, sometimes in consultation with experts in a given area.

As the digital world evolved and the principles of digital publishing were refined, TLG practices changed. The TLG still selects one text edition—preferably a critical edition—as the basis for producing its digital text. Where possible, the digital version adheres to the layout of the print edition so that scholars may consult the printed book, which typically contains useful information not provided by the TLG, such as the editor's introduction and critical apparatus. The selected edition is cited in the online Canon. However, unlike the online version that offers one bibliographical reference for each work, the TLG bibliographical database maintains records of multiple editions. These are editions that have been consulted in preparation of the TLG instantiation of the text, editions of historical importance, or editions that were considered “canonical” in the past and have subsequently been replaced by other editions.

This guide includes most of the editions that the TLG has located and documented over time, including new editions that may be added to the corpus in the future. Not every edition ever published can be part of the Canon, but an effort has been made to include as many major editions as possible.

The TLG invests considerable time in text correction, using specialized software to identify and correct typographical and transcription errors, often by consulting manuscripts and multiple secondary sources. As a result, the TLG digital version tends to be more accurate than its printed counterparts.

WORK CLASSIFICATION

Each work is assigned one or more classification tags (see below). Work classifications are rendered in Latin and are usually abbreviated.

Like descriptive epithets for authors, classification tags are used to identify the genre of the work and provide database fields for searching purposes. Recognizing that TLG users are not always familiar with the way TLG uses classification tags, the practice for the online version has been to assign multiple classification tags so that texts are more likely to appear in corpus searches.

Most classification tags are self-explanatory. Some are used in ways that are peculiar to the Canon, and these are explained below.

Acta was originally attached to certain books of the New Testament, such as the ACTA JOANNIS (0317), denoting the “acts”—that is, the deeds—of the Apostles. As the TLG expanded into later periods, use of the Acta tag was expanded to classify documents of church councils such as the Acts of the Oecumenical Councils (Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum), previously tagged as Concilia, and documents related to monastic foundation—often combined with the classification Ecclesiastica and Liturgica.

Anthol(ogia) is used to classify specific postclassical collections constructed in late antiquity or the Middle Ages from earlier disparate sources. These can be collections of poems or epigrams, such as the Anthologia Graeca (7000 001) and Stobaeus’s Anthologium (2037 001). The tag is also attached to systematic collections of miscellaneous extracts known as florilegia that illustrate a specific doctrine or theme, for example, the Florilegium Cyrillianum (4147 001), which provides a list of extracts from the writings of Cyril.

Apocalyp(sis) is used to define works of a prophetic nature with a clear eschatological focus, that is, an emphasis on the “final end” of the creation. For example, Daniel in the Septuaginta and the Apocalypsis Ioannis in the New Testament are classified as apocalyptic, as opposed to the books of the prophets in the Septuagint that do not contain an apocalyptic vision and are marked as Prophet.⁹

Apocryph(a) and Pseudepigr(apha) are often overlapping terms for genres whose definitions are contested. For the purpose of the Canon, Apocryph. is used to identify works that have been transmitted as part of the Greek version of the Bible but were not included in the traditional Hebrew Bible. Examples of Old Testament works marked as apocrypha are Ecclesiasticus (0527 034), Baruch (0527 050), and some gospels and lives of the apostles that are considered extracanonical in relation to the New Testament by Christians, such as the Acta Pauli (0388) and the Apocalypsis Joannis (1158). The term pseudepigrapha, on the other hand, is used for works that are not part of the Greek or Hebrew version of the Bible and have been transmitted, possibly falsely, under the name of a religious authority, for example, Liber Enoch (1463), ascribed to Enoch, the great grandfather of Noah, and the Apocalypsis Eliae (1156).

Apol(ogetica) is used for works that defend “orthodox” Christian doctrine against its critics through systematic argumentation, especially those considered heretical. Use of this tag is limited to a specific group of Christian works, for example, the works of the early Christian apologist Justin Martyr (0645). It has not been applied to classical works known by the title of “apology,” such as Plato’s Apologia Socratis.

Biogr(apha) is assigned to biographical and autobiographical writings, such as Diogenes Laertius’s Vitae Philosophorum (0004 001) and Nicephorus Blemmydes’s Curriculum Vitae (3092 001). It is distinct from Hagiogr(apha), which is used to classify works about the lives and suffering of saints and martyrs in the Judaeo-Christian tradition. Both terms are occasionally used when the work refers to a saint who happens to be a historical figure. Thus the Vita Joannis Chrysostomi by Georgius Alexandrinus (3383 001) is tagged as both biographical and hagiographical.

Caten(a) is applied to scholiastic comments on biblical passages.¹⁰ It is distinct from Exeget(ica), which applies to writings that interpret biblical writings, and Comm(entaria), which is used for commentaries on secular literature, such as the works of Plato and Aristotle, the medical commentaries of Galen, and the philological commentaries of Porphyry and Eustathius on Homer. The classification Schol(ia) is for the most part used for works derived from the disjecta membra of otherwise lost commentaries on classical authors. The majority of scholiastic works begin with “Scholia in” followed by the name of the ancient author (for example, Scholia in Homerum), although some of the scholia are carried under their individual author. Thus, Joannes Tzetzes’s scholia to Aristophanes are carried under SCHOLIA IN ARISTOPHANEM, while his Exegesis in Homeri Iliadem is carried under his name.

Concil(ia) is used for writings such as speeches, letters, rosters, and proceedings of ecumenical councils often combined with Acta.

¹⁰ The classification tag Caten. follows the definition of catena in Cross, Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, p. 247: “a word applied to the Biblical commentaries dating from the 5th c. onwards, in which the successive verses of the Scriptural text were elucidated by ‘chains’ of passages derived from previous commentators.”

Coqu(inaria) has been attached to a small number of works with a primary focus on food/nutrition, such as Galen's De alimentorum facultatibus libri iii (0057 037) and its Byzantine descendant Syntagma de alimentorum facultatibus by Symeon Seth (3113 002). The classification has not been used for works that may simply contain references to cooking and food, such as Athenaeus's Deipnosophistae (0008 001).

Dialog(us) is assigned to works written in the form of prose dialogue structured in the form of a discussion or debate. Most of the works of Plato, Philostratus's Heroicus, and a number of patristic writings such as Cyril's Dialogus cum Nestorio (4090 110) are marked with this tag. The tag is not used to classify various forms of drama (tragedy, comedy, etc.) or debates included in historiographical prose, for example, the various debates included in Thucydides Historiae (0003 001).

Eccl(esiaistica) is used for writings that pertain to rules and practices of the Christian church. It is used broadly for all types of ecclesiastical writings, from sermons to guidelines for monastic life, as opposed to Theol(ogica), which is applied to works dealing with doctrine and the nature of divinity. Thus, Basilus Caesarensis's ascetical works such as the Asceticon magnum (2040 050) and Regulae morales (2040 051) are tagged as Eccl., as opposed to his De spiritu sancto (2040 003), which is classified as theological.

Encom(iastica) is used for a variety of laudatory works, especially Byzantine, often in connection with Hagiogr(apha). The term is found in orations and homilies, in both prose and verse, honoring a person or idea. The Canon does not use Encom. for hymns composed for performance at formal religious occasions. Thus, the Hymni Homerici (0013) are classified as Hymn(ica) and not as Encom.

Exeget(ica) is reserved for interpretations of the Old and New Testament. It is distinct from Comm(entarius), which is applied to works of secular literature. For example, Athanasius's Expositiones in Psalmos (2035 061) is classified as exegetic, while the philological commentaries of Eustathius and Porphyry on Homer are tagged as Comm.

See also Caten. and Schol.

Gramm(atica) is used for treatises on grammar (orthography, accentuation, parts of speech, inflection) and works that have traditionally borne the title Ars Grammatica or Fragmenta Grammatica. Joannes Philoponus's Περὶ Αἰολίδος (pars operis De dialectis), Arcadius's Epitome, the works of Aelius-Herodianus, and works included under ANONYMI GRAMMATICI are classified as Gramm. See also Rhet.

Homilet(ica) is used for homilies on theological topics intended for public delivery or written as if they were intended for delivery in a religious setting. Thus, the homilies of John Chrysostom are marked as Homilet., as opposed to the speeches of Attic orators, which are marked as Orat(io), that is, discourses meant for public delivery on secular topics.

Hymn(ica) is applied to hymnal poetry, both ancient and Byzantine, composed in honor or in celebration of divinities. The tag is used to classify the Homeric Hymns but also the works of the sixth-century hymnographer Romanus Melodus. It is distinct from Liturg(ica), which is reserved for various forms of hymns composed as part of the Orthodox liturgy.

Hypoth(esis) is used to classify the anonymous prefixes to Greek tragedies and comedies as well as the hypotheses or didaskaliai found in papyrological fragments, such as the Argumenta Comica, which are carried under COMICA ADESPOTA (0662). This tag is often combined with Schol.

Jurisprud(entia) and Legal(ia) are assigned to legal works. Jurisprud. is reserved for works that deal with the theory of law or large collections of legal documents such as the Codex Justinianus (2734 028) or the ninth-century Byzantine code initiated by Emperor Basil I, known as BASILICA (5065). Legal. is used for all types of legal documents and is often attached to monastic foundation acts and edicts of Byzantine emperors.

Liturg(ica) is used for texts specifically labeled as liturgies and for hymns that form part of the liturgical services of the Orthodox Church. These include the Liturgia of Basiliius Caesarensis as well as euchologia, canons, and synaxaria of the Christian saints. In many cases the distinction is not clear-cut, since most of the liturgical texts can also be classified as hymns. Hymn(ica) refers to a specific genre of poetry, whereas Liturg. is reserved for poetic compositions used in a particular ecclesiastical setting.

Lexicogr(aphica) is used broadly for lexica such as Hesychius's Lexicon (4085), but also glossaries and word lists with definitions, for example, Apion's Fragmenta de glossis Homericis (1152 004), encyclopedic lexica such as the Suda (9010), and thesauri and onomastica such as Pollux's Onomasticon (0542).

Med(ica) is applied to all medical writings, ranging from the works of Galen and Hippocrates to treatises of veterinary medicine such as HIPPLATRICA (0738). Works dealing with pharmacological prescriptions, such as Nicander's Theriaca, are also classified as Med.

Myth(ographa) is used in a narrow sense for compendia or interpretations of mythology, such as Pseudo-Apollodorus's Bibliotheca. It is also used to classify works of historians such as Acusilaus (0392) and Hellanicus (0539), who cite myths as evidence in their historical accounts. This tag is not meant to classify genres based on myth such as epic and tragedy.

Orat(io) is used for speeches composed for formal public delivery. It is distinct from Rhet(orica), which is used to classify works concerned with the art, theories, and techniques of the "art of persuasion."¹¹ Thus Gorgias's works (0593) are considered rhetorical, while the speeches of Lysias and Demosthenes are tagged as Orat. The distinction is not always clear. A work may be classified as both Rhet. and Orat.¹²

Poem(a) is a tag created to classify metrical works that do not fall into any other classification, either due to their fragmentary nature or because their theme cannot be easily classified under a specific genre.

Relig(iosa) is used specifically for scriptures of the Judaeo-Christian tradition, that is, the Septuaginta and the books of the New Testament. The tag Theol(ogica) is much broader and can be used for all theological writings on the nature of divinity, the relationship between human and divine, or religious doctrine. Theol. and Eccles. are often used together, especially when theological works are focused on topics of interest to the Christian Church.

Satura and Satyr(a). Satyr(a) is limited to satyr plays and indicates the presence of satyrs as characters in the play. Euripides's Cyclops is a good example of the work marked as Satyr. Satura, on the other hand, is more common and used for all satirical works, namely works that correspond to the modern use of the term satire.¹³

¹¹ See George Kennedy, The Art of Persuasion in Greece (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1963): 269–70.

Sched(ographia) is used to classify a number of Byzantine works that were produced as grammatical and syntactical exercises for school use. These texts (in prose or verse) do not fall under the general category of Gramm.¹⁴

Test(imonia) is attached to works that contain testimonia, that is, discussions of or references to a particular work or author that are not direct quotations. It is usually attached to collections of fragments such as Jacoby's fragments of the Greek historians.¹⁵

Typic(a) is used to classify monastic foundation documents, especially testaments of the founders.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The TLG represents fifty years of research covering thousands of authors and works spanning over three millennia. When I joined the project in 1996, I assumed the responsibility of expanding and updating the biographical and bibliographical materials of the TLG Canon. No research effort can claim expertise on every aspect and historical period of Greek literature, and my own experience is no exception. My work on the Canon has benefited from the guidance and generosity of a large network of scholars who have offered invaluable advice. Although I cannot list each and every one by name, let me just say that I am enormously grateful for their help.

Luci Berkowitz held the primary responsibility for the Canon research from the inception of the project until her full retirement from the University in 1997. Her contributions cannot be overstated. I had the privilege of working with Luci in my first year at the TLG and was able to experience first-hand her depth of knowledge, philological acumen, and unparalleled attention to detail. Classicists have always counted on the TLG to provide accurate information, and this is largely due to the high standards that Luci set for the project.

Ted Brunner directed the TLG from 1972 to 1997. A superb administrator and scholar, Ted created many of the protocols that still guide the TLG. I am grateful to him for having entrusted me with this enormous responsibility and for having been a mentor and a friend for several years. His passing left a huge vacuum, but his legacy remains alive.

The TLG would not have existed without the technological savvy of David W. Packard, who provided both the technology and the means to disseminate the TLG data at a time when the prospect of a searchable digital corpus seemed more like science fiction than reality.

William Johnson started his career working on the development of the Ibycus software and briefly returned to the TLG as assistant director in the early 1990s. He has been a true friend throughout my tenure at the TLG and someone I could always count on for sage advice.

The TLG Advisory Board (William Johnson, Donald Mastronarde, Maria Mavroudi, James Porter, and Claudia Rapp) have generously offered advice and helped me think through many critical questions.

I would like to thank a number of individuals who have offered guidance over the years. I had delightful conversations with the late Ihor Sevcenco, who was thrilled to see the TLG finally expand into the Byzantine period. Alice Mary Talbot has always been willing to answer questions and provide expertise, especially in areas related to Byzantine hagiography. Stratis Papaioannou generously offered suggestions for additions to the corpus and provided the impetus for including the complete works of Symeon Metaphrastes. John Duffy, Thanos Markopoulos, Elizabeth Schiffer, Sever Voicu, Katherin Papadopoulos, Notis Toufexis, Dia Philippides, Eleanor Dickey, and John Kazazis have all contributed in different ways. Our collaborators from the University of Vienna and the Lexikon zur byzantinischen Gräzität (LBG), especially Erich Trapp, Claudia Rapp, and Andreas Rhoby, provided invaluable help as the TLG moved into Byzantium.

A number of TLG research associates have contributed to the project. The TLG would not be what it is without their dedication and commitment. Nick Nicholas and Nishad Prakash worked on the technical aspects of the migration from Ibycus and the development of our first online systems. Nick Nicholas was also instrumental in the development of the TLG lemmatizer. Astrid Steiner-Weber (1998–99) was the first Byzantinist at the TLG. Antonia Giannouli (1999–2000) worked with me, sometimes late into the morning hours, to restore the formatting and to manually reenter thousands of Canon entries during the migration out of Ibycus. Andreas Rhoby spent one year with us in 2000–2001 and has since collaborated in a number of projects, especially the creation of the online LBG. Valerie Karras (2004–5) worked on the monastic documents project. Konstantinos Palaiologos (2012–17) and Stephanie Roussou (2012–14) contributed to the expansion of the Canon and the editing of texts. Regina Loehr (2018–present) has provided text outlines for several works.

Elias Petrou (2017–present), a very productive member of our current team, has contributed to the expansion of the Byzantine corpus and has also ventured outside of his own area of expertise to work on identifying text editions from the post-Byzantine era. As this volume was approaching its final stages of completion, the world came to a halt due to the COVID pandemic and library resources became difficult to access. Elias's efforts in locating materials were nothing short of heroic.

John Salatas, who joined the project in 2012, has done a remarkable job developing the new and much expanded TLG search platform. He was also instrumental in the massive changes, updates, and improvements required to assemble the data for this volume and to convert it from XML into the proper camera-ready format for publication.

I am grateful to the University of California, Irvine, which has hosted the project since its inception, and to the Office of Research, which has offered us a supportive home. During my tenure as director, I have had the pleasure of working with five Vice Chancellors for Research (Frederic Wan, William Parker, Sue Bryant, John Hemminger, and Pramod Khargonekar), whose unwavering support has made it possible for the TLG to grow and thrive. Michael Gottfredson, Herb Killackey, Stephen Franklin and especially Kyhm Penfil have been there to help me navigate challenging issues.

I wish to acknowledge the helpful suggestions of the UC Press readers. My editor, Eric Schmidt, enthusiastically supported the idea of this volume. LeKeisha Hughes, Cindy Fulton, and my copy-editor Ben Alexander have all helped to improve this book. Any errors that have survived their rigorous process are mine alone.

My final thanks go to Marianne McDonald, who had both the foresight and the commitment to make her dream of a digital thesaurus for the Greek language a reality. She will never know how much her friendship and faith in me have meant over the years.

Like any project that is important to so many people with different views about what it is or ought to be, the TLG has had its fair share of happy and stormy days. The journey has not always been easy, but in the end what matters is that the project has continued to move forward and to benefit scholarship worldwide. When I was preparing to come to California in 1996, a friend commented that the TLG could be a rare opportunity to do something of lasting consequence. Over time I have come to realize how true this statement was. It has been an honor and a privilege to be part of this amazing effort and to be able to celebrate fifty years of innovation and creativity.
